ROOSEVELT IN THE JUNGLE.

Ex-president Theodore Roosevelt is out on the high seas enroute to the jungles of central Africa where he goes in quest of big game.

The distinguished hunter, and party sailed from New York last Tuesday and by this time next week will have reached the dark continent.

All arrangements for the trip, after arrival on African soil were completed weeks ago, even to the securing of a hunter's license, which is required in that country within the spheres of influence of the civilized nations. The license grants permission to the hunter to kill no more than two elephants, two rhinoceroses, or two hippopotami, and a limited number of antelopes, but leaves him free to deal with as many lions, leopards and other animals of the man-eating class as may fall to his gun. In special cases a license is issued granting the right to kill game of all kinds without limit; but Mr. Roosevelt declined such a license, and accepted one with the usual limitations. He goes to Africa not for love of slaughter, but as a sportsman and scientific investigator. He will take no reporters in his party and will not have any friendships in the jungle. Any reckless press man who tries to "tag" him will have to take care of himself when the ex-president is shooting lions.

Bulletins from the big game country—the Great Nandi plateau, many miles inland from Mombassa—and from points west and north, are of a character to stir the hunting blood and make the pulses gallop. In one section some thirty-two lions and a detachment of elephants and giraffes have been sighted. When Mr. Roosevelt and his party "trok" from the coast to the hunting ground there will be "spoor" of big game in abundance. The white chief's "safari" or hunting kit, will be in requisition, and we may look forward to some exciting letters from the field before mid-summer.

NEVADA STATE UNIVERSITY.

It is said Clarence Mackey is about to donate $250,000 to the University of Nevada, which is to be applied towards the erection of a new library and administration building. Mr. Mackey, appreciating what Nevada mines did for his father, has a desire to see the university grow into one of the great educational institutions of the United States.

His donations some months ago towards the equipment of the Mackey School of Mines, which is a branch of the university, was commendable. Nevada is the greatest mining state in the Union and it should have the best mining school in the world. Mr. Mackey's previous bestowals upon the university have exceeded $300,000. If some other prominent citizens of this state who have become millionaires through wealth produced from Nevada mountains display the same generosity of Mr. Mackey, the university at Reno will soon become a powerful institution of learning. How about this Mr. Wingfield and Mr. Nixon?

An appeal for the retention of the duty on lead was made in the House of Representatives by Mr. Burton L. French, says the Mining Scientific Press, in which he declared that "probably only two lead-producing mines in Idaho could pay operating expenses were the duty removed," while the present wage-scale remained unaltered. In other words, the industry would collapse except when aided by the silver obtained as a by-product in the refining of lead. As the precious-metal content is variable, this would render lead mining precarious at all times in Idaho, in case the American market should be exposed to invasion from abroad.

Utah will be wet for at least two years more. Governor Spry has killed the anti-liquor bill passed by both branches of the late legislature. That was to be expected and the Republican machine in that state fulfilled its pre-election agreement with the liquor interests who supplied the Republican state committee with $30,000 for campaign purposes. Governor Spry based his disapproval on the ground of unconstitutional provisions.

By the way, dry farming in the valleys near Pioche is going to become an important industry in a few years. If it pays in Utah, why shouldn't it pay here?

The Utah legislature made more noise and did less this year than any previous session of that body.

The snow storm of this week will supply an abundance of moisture for the ranges.

Who says there is no precipitation in Southern Nevada.
